

AUTHORS

Elena Bogdanova has been an associate professor at the European University at St. Petersburg and the Russian Presidential Academy of National Economy and Public Administration since 2016, and a research fellow at the Centre for Independent Social Research (CISR, Saint Petersburg) since 2001. She received a candidate of sciences degree in sociology in 2006. Currently she is a PhD student at the University of Eastern Finland. She has published nearly 50 articles, one of which won the International Sociological Association's worldwide competition for young sociologists in 2014. Her research interests include the sociology of aging, research of justice and regulative systems, Soviet society and postsocialist transformations, and qualitative research methods. Bogdanova is one of the editors of the book Communism and Consumerism: The Soviet Alternative to the Affluent Society (Brill, 2015). She is currently working on the book Complaints to the Authorities in Russia: A Trap between Tradition and Legal Modernization (Routledge, 2021).

Konstantin Galkin is Senior Research Fellow at the Sociological Institute, Federal Center of Theoretical and Applied Sociology of the Russian Academy of Sciences since 2020. In 2019/2020 he is an Oxford Russia Fellowship fellow, working on the project "Population Aging: Equipped Environment vs. Familial Community." In 2018 Galkin defended his PhD thesis on the topic "Professional Identity of Young Doctors in the City and in the Village: Life Strategies and Everyday Practices (the case of Saint Petersburg and Leningrad Oblast)" at the National Research University Higher School of Economics. He is the author of more than 20 articles. Galkin's research interests include the sociology and anthropology of aging, new approaches in aging studies, sociology of medicine, medical anthropology, sociology of professions, rural research, actor-network theory, qualitative methods of sociological research, and social theory.

Irina Grigoryeva received her candidate of sciences degree in social philosophy in 1985 and doctor of sciences degree in sociology in 2005. She is currently a full professor in the Department of Sociology, St. Petersburg State University, and a leading researcher at the Sociological Institute of the Russian Academy of Sciences. She has led and participated in a number of research projects; the most recent are projects funded by the Russian Science Foundation "Models of Interaction between Society and the Elderly: Research into the Possibilities of Social Inclusion" (2014–2018; director) and "Challenges of Transformation of the Welfare State in Russia: Institutional Changes, Social Investment, and Digitalization of Social Services" (2019–2021; participant). She is the author of seven monographs and many articles on social policy problems and population aging. She is also the editor of the section “Social and Behavioral Gerontology” at the Russian journal Advances in Gerontology.

Jane Gary Harris is Professor Emerita in the Department of Slavic Languages, Literatures, and Culture at the University of Pittsburgh (USA). Her research has ranged from studies of the poet Osip Mandelstam, which resulted in two books, to autobiography of Russian and Soviet writers and poets, culminating in an edited volume Autobiographical Statements in Twentieth-Century Russian Literature (1990, 2014). During the past decade, she has focused on research into the culture of aging in Russian healthcare and social services as well as research in literary gerontology, publishing multiple journal articles and chapters in edited volumes on these topics. Her current interests include Russian women writers’ efforts to re-envision aging and the aging process and to resist the negative stereotypes of old age and the elderly dominating not merely the media but the health care and social care systems.

Arturs Holavins received a PhD in sociology from the European University at St. Petersburg (Russia) in 2019. He is currently finishing his doctoral studies at the Faculty of Social Sciences at the University of Helsinki. His current research interests focus on NGO-ization, elderly care, and the “silver economy.” Holavins has participated in several qualitative sociological research projects on aging and elderly care in Russia under the auspices of the Gender Studies Program at the European University at St. Petersburg. He is the author of several articles on objectification of care receivers and professionalization of the third sector.

Maija Könönen received her PhD in Russian literature from the University of Helsinki in 2003, where now she is an adjunct professor of Russian literature. In 2010–2018 she worked as a professor of Russian cultural studies at the University of Eastern Finland, Joensuu. Könönen was the leader of the multidisciplinary project “Between the Normal and the Abnormal: Cultural Meanings of Dementia and Old Age in Finland and Russia,” funded by the Kone Foundation (2016–2019). Her other research interests include “madness” in Russian literature and culture and poetics of space. She has published a book Four Ways of Writing the City”: St. Petersburg-Leningrad as a Metaphor in the Poetry of Joseph Brodsky (Helsinki University, 2013). Her most recent publications include an article in Wiener Slawistische Almanach (2017) and a chapter in the edited volume Foreign Countries of Old Age: East and Southeast European Perspectives on Aging (Transcript Verlag, 2020).

Olga Maximova received a candidate of sciences degree in sociology from Kazan State University (Russia) in 1999. She is currently an assistant professor in the Department of General and Ethnic Sociology at Kazan Federal University and working on a doctoral dissertation. Her research interests include generational analysis of society and the dynamics of generations in the modern information society. She is the author of a number of academic articles and monographs that present her research on representatives of different generations in Russian society.

Aliia Nizamova is a PhD student in the Gender Studies Program at the European University at St. Petersburg (Russia). She has a master's degree in sociology from the European University at St. Petersburg and a master's degree in gender studies from the Central European University. Nizamova's ongoing ethnographic research focuses on the lived experience of people aging with dementia in nursing homes in Russia. Her research interests include gender studies, feminist and queer theory, critical gerontology, and dementia studies.

Arkadiia Savchenko received her master's degree from the Department of Sociology and Philosophy of the European University in St. Petersburg (Russia) in 2019. Her research interests include the sociology of care and the sociology of aging.

Elena Zdravomyslova is candidate of sciences in sociology, professor in the Department of Sociology at the European University at St. Petersburg, and codirector of the Gender Studies Program at the European University at St. Petersburg (Russia). She specializes in gender relations, sociology of care, and sociology of aging. Among her recent publications are 12 Lectures on the Sociology of Gender (in Russian, coauthored with Anna Temkina; EUSP Press, 2015); articles (in Russian) in journals Laboratorium: Russian Review of Social Research and The Journal of Sociology and Social Anthropology, as well as in the edited volume Critical Sociology of Care: Crossroads of Social Inequality (in Russian, coauthored with Aliia Nizamova; EUSP Press, 2019).

Julia Zelikova received her candidate of sciences degree in sociology from the National Research University Higher School of Economics (Moscow, Russia) in 2001. She is currently an assistant professor in the Department of International Relations and Political Studies at the North-West Institute of Management of the Russian Presidential Academy of National Economy and Public Administration (Saint Petersburg, Russia), where she teaches analysis of sociological data, political demography, and social policy in the countries of the European Union. Her current research focuses on population aging in contemporary Russia (construction of aging, discriminatory practices and discourses). She is the author of the book Aging Europe: Demography, Politics, Sociology (Norma Publishers, 2014; in Russian), as well as many articles about population aging, social policy, and social justice in contemporary Russia.