

AUTHORS

Peter Bakumov is a sociologist and specialist in the field of international relations. He has recently obtained a PhD in sociology from Jacobs University Bremen. His areas of expertise include comparative research of fascism, discourse analysis of social practices, and the historical sociology of the far right.

Marina Kurilova is an architect, urban researcher, assistant at the Institute of Design and Urban Studies, ITMO University (Saint Petersburg, Russia), and an associate at the Quality of Urban Life Laboratory. She received a bachelor's degree in architecture from Ural Federal University and a master's degree in urban studies from the Institute of Urban Studies. Her interests include analysis of the quality of urban design, urban emptiness, and circular practices in the city.

Elena Nedoseka received her PhD in sociology in 2009 from Russian State University of Tourism and Service. At the present, she is a senior researcher at the Sociological Institute, Federal Center of Theoretical and Applied Sociology, Russian Academy of Sciences. Her main research interests lie in urban sociology (especially of small towns) and urban studies. Nedoseka led a research project of the Russian State Science Fund "Mechanisms of the Regional Identity Construction among the Population of the Murmansk Region." Currently she is a participant in the projects of the Russian Foundation for Basic Research that study different aspects of local resilience of small towns. She is the author of articles on regional identity's problems, urban values, local resilience of small towns, and the methodological aspects of urban studies research.

Aleksandra Nenko is a sociologist and urban researcher with a PhD in sociology (2011, Taras Shevchenko National University of Kyiv). She is currently an associate professor at the Institute of Design and Urban Studies, ITMO University (Saint Petersburg, Russia), where she heads the Quality of Urban Life Laboratory. Nenko is a visiting researcher at the University of the Arts in Helsinki. Her research interests combine sociology of the city and sociology of the arts. She has published articles on topics such as quality of urban environment, perception of urban space, emotions of the city, environmental values, and arts in urban public spaces.

Hayk Smbatyan completed his PhD studies in sociology at Yerevan State University in 2022 and is currently awaiting his viva voce examination. He holds a master's degree in peace and conflict studies from Uppsala University. His doctoral thesis explores the sociopsychological foundations and intergroup dynamics of the Nagorno-Karabakh conflict. Having authored a number of research publications in local and international academic journals, Smbatyan's main research interests include causes and dynamics of armed conflicts, identity and human rights research, and innovative research methodologies. With a research geography covering Armenia, South Caucasus, and the wider post-Soviet region, Smbatyan is currently Deputy Research Director at the Caucasus Research Resource Center (CRRC)-Armenia Foundation and a lecturer in theory and history of sociology at Yerevan State University.

Yaroslav Snarski is studying for his master's degree (program "Comparative Politics of Eurasia") at HSE University in Saint Petersburg, Russia. His research interests are connected to contentious politics and environmental protests in Russian regions. He is a participant in academic projects on green nationalism (since 2021) and political machines' performance in Russia (since 2022).

Nadezhda Sokolova is a senior lecturer in the Department of Sociology at HSE University in Saint Petersburg, Russia. Her research interests lie in the field of sociology of art with the emphasis on cultural consumption and in the field of social network analysis. These interests are reflected in her publications, including the articles "Does Popular Culture Bridge Cultural Holes? A Study of a Literary Taste System Using Unimodal Network Projections" and (in Russian) "Milieus, Not Classes: Patterns of Horizontal Stratification in Urban Russia," both coauthored with Mikhail Sokolov and published in 2020.

Maria Starun is preparing to defend her PhD dissertation on the history of comrades' courts and socialist legal consciousness in the Soviet Union during the interwar period. She is currently teaching at HSE University in Saint Petersburg (Russia). She has published several articles on the Soviet legal order, including in the journals such as Cahiers du monde russe and Soviet and Post-Soviet Review. Her primary research interests are around the discourses about socialist justice, its practices, and the techniques of searching for judicial truth, as well as the role of testimony and political arguments in court proceedings. After completing her dissertation, Starun intends to continue her research in the field of legal studies, bringing gender-based violence in the USSR into the focus of her research.

Svetlana Tulaeva has a candidate of sciences degree in sociology from Saint Petersburg State University (2011) and a PhD in legislative studies from the University of Eastern Finland (2015). She is a researcher in the Department of Geographical and Historical Studies at the University of Eastern Finland. She is currently working on the research project "Diversities of the Environmental Movement and Its Impact on Sustainable Development in Russia." Tulaeva's research interests are connected with the problems of corporate social responsibility, sustainable development, and environmental movements. She has published numerous articles in a range of journals, including Europe-Asia Studies, Forest Policy and Economics, Sustainability, and others.